Personal Hygiene

Personal hygiene is very important in Islam. Muslims are expected to keep their bodies, clothes, and homes clean. They are also expected to use perfume and deodorant to smell good.

Here are some specific examples of personal hygiene practices that are recommended in Islam:

- Bathing regularly

- Washing your hands before and after eating
- Brushing your teeth twice a day
- Using deodorant and perfume
- Keeping your home clean and tidy

Social Interactions

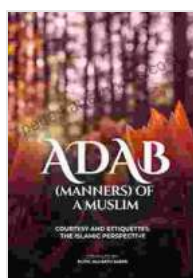

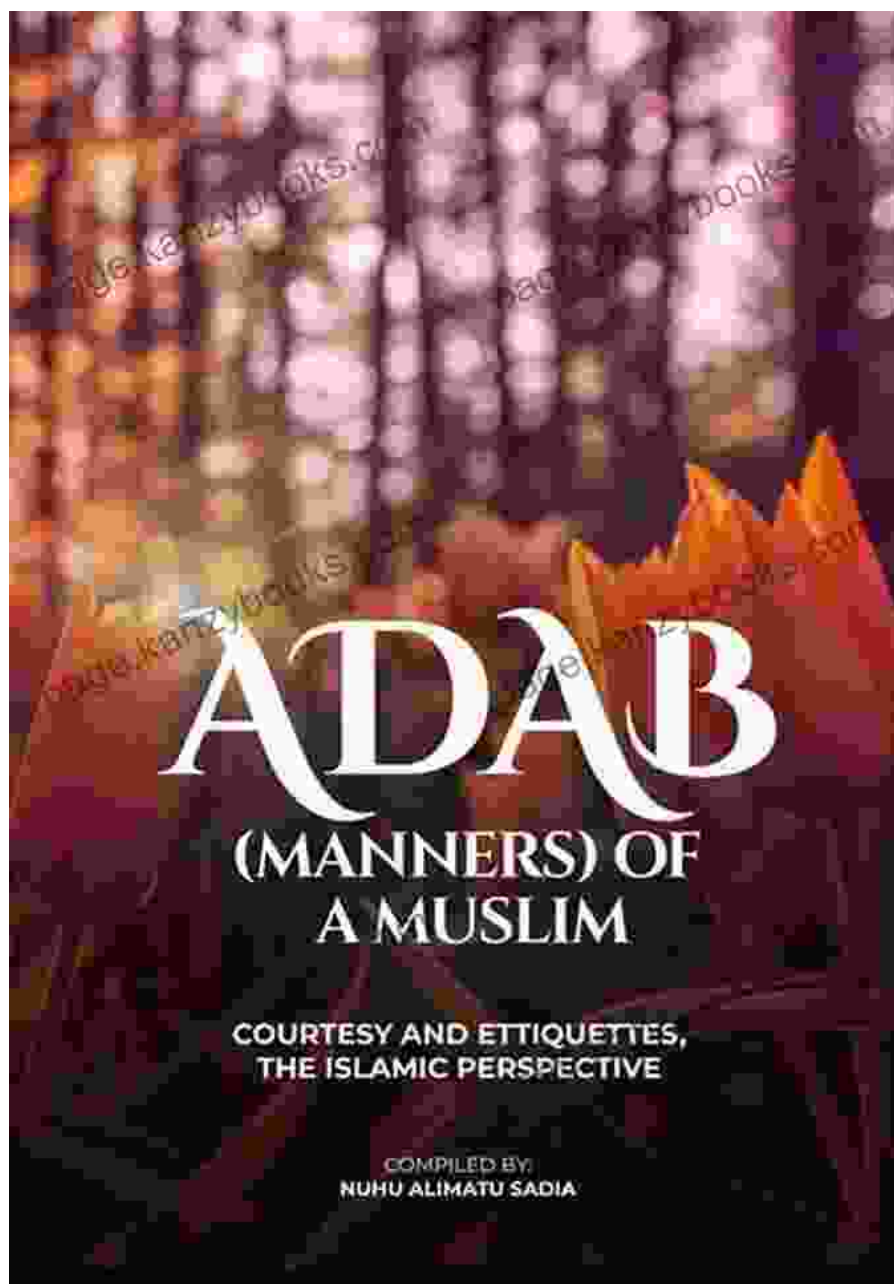

Social interactions are also very important in Islam. Muslims are expected to be polite, respectful, and compassionate towards others. They are also expected to avoid gossip, slander, and backbiting.

Here are some specific examples of social etiquette practices that are recommended in Islam:

- Greeting others with a smile and a handshake
- Using polite language
- Listening to others attentively
- Avoiding interrupting others
- Being respectful of others' opinions
- Avoiding gossip, slander, and backbiting
